Miss Clare Eames St iking Picture in Maeterlinck Play

Aglavaine and Selysette' the First Offering of Afternoon Theater Company.

By LAWRENCE REAMER.

The Afternoon Theater, which appears

William Raymond as the choice of two loving women possessed distinction in diction and action. He sounded elequently the note of passion in the character and would have won praise for such an admirable performance of a classic role even outside the sacrosanct theater of the Belgian Shakespeare.

Miss Clare Eames with her superb dignity of bearing salled triumphantly through the play like some conquering bird of gold and black plumage. Miss Eva Le Gallienne's portrayal of the little wife had the necessary simplicity and a touching naturalness that seemed occasionally out of place in the general stained glass attitude of the players. Perhaps Miss Eames was after all the most plastic and could almost double up in her expression of poetic limpness. But Miss Le Gallienne and Mr. Raymond showed they were not without with the state of the players. But Miss Le Gallienne and Mr. Raymond showed they were not without skill when it came to fainting in coils.

Apart from the excellent acting of these three artists and the tragic grief of the grandmother, as Miss Caroline Newcombe gave it in moving utterance, there was little to be praised in the representation. Thin and wrinkled textile of a neutral shade, finished with a high dade of black velvet, which dragged it out of all shape, formed the background for the interior scenes. A creased and mildewed canvas of pale cobalt furnished the background when the secactook place out of doors. The tower must have been indeed dangerous, since the light was plainly visible through is read not only by the stars and near-stars of the theatrical firmament, but it is the one absolutely necessary publication of the amusement world. It reaches them all. It follows the amusement world. It reaches them all. It follows them wherever they go. It is their one source of theatrical news that they can't do without. And it enjoys their respect and confidence because it has always been honest and truthful, always devoted to the best interests of the profession. The 300,000 people of the amusement world read it religiously every week.

The Billboard has a weekly cir-culation three times larger than the combined circulations of all other magazines in this field.

The action of John F. Glichrist, Commissioner of Licenses, in threatening to revoke the license and relation to the public conscience was upheld in the Supreme Court yesterday. Justice Wagner denied a motion for an injunction to prevent Mr. Glichrist rovoking the theater license and ruled that he was acting within the scope of his authority and was the sole judge under the law whether or not the play was fit to be seen.

Although ordered discontinued on penalty of the revocation of the license the play has been produced continuously dince by virtue of a temporary restraining order obtained by Al H. Woods, the producer. In applying for it he contended that Mr. Glichrist's authority was purely administrative under the law and that as he was not clothed with judicial discretion he had no authority to decide whether a play was indecent.
